The M. Wilhelmina Boldt Interior Design Program offers two programs leading to a Master of Arts in interior design. The first professional degree is for those with a baccalaureate degree not in interior design or architecture.

The Council for Interior Design Accreditation (CIDA) has continually accredited Marymount's first professional M.A. in Interior Design program since 2005. CIDA is the only accrediting agency for interior design.

Graduation from a CIDA-accredited program ensures that graduates possess the knowledge and skills needed to enter the profession. Most design firms and members of the profession recognize the importance and quality of a degree from an accredited program and seek to hire its graduates.
